Traversing beautiful nature surrounded by robust mountains, the path explores varied and exciting terrain suitable for most. The trip into Steindalen and onwards to Steindalsbreen glacier is a geological treat where you see ice-ridge steps covering a period of more than 8000 years. Information posts along the path explain the area's flora, fauna and local place names. There are also signs depicting the glacier's yearly withdrawal. Walking the glacier is discouraged for the unexperienced.

Steindalsbreen Glacier

Trail description

Park at the marked exit along county road 868. The path starts at Akselstua with an ascent before levelling towards the cabin Steindalshytta. From here up to Steindalsbreen glacier it's relatively flat terrain to the moraine ridge, where there are relatively steep climbs before flattening out again. The oldest ice-ridge steps are at the bottom of the valley, while the fresh deposits are at the glacier's base. This affects the vegetation, which is more developed and species rich in the valley's bottom compared to the pioneer vegetation higher up. There are opportunities to rent the association's Steindalshytta cabin.
